

“It lets people have more personal agency with their own health”: Perceptions of STI pre-exposure prophylaxis (STI-PrEP) among gay and bisexual men

Ryan Horn^A, Dr Bridget Haire^B, Dr Denton Callander^{B,C}
^AUNSW Medicine; ^BThe Kirby Institute, ^CCentre for Social Research in Health

We would like to thank all of our participants for generously contributing their time & sharing their experiences for this study.

Disclosures:

No pharmaceutical grants were received for the development of this study.

Join the Conversation @ASHMMEDIA #IUSTIAP18

BACKGROUND/AIMS & METHODS:

www.iustiap18.com

Background	Aims
	<h3>Methods</h3>

Join the Conversation @ASHMMEDIA #IUSTIAP18

RESULTS:www.iustiap18.comAcceptability:*Conceptualisation:

Join the Conversation @ASHMMEDIA #IUSTIAP18

CONCLUSIONS/IMPLICATIONS:www.iustiap18.com

- Results support the need for further research
- Implementation studies should monitor the key concerns of participants including:
 - Side effects
 - Antibiotic resistance
 - Stigmatisation
- Providing information about potential side effects and effectiveness
- Promotional efforts targeting the 'sexual citizen' may be beneficial in promoting uptake