

Prue Warrilow

CEO

Australian Research Alliance
for Children and Youth
(ARACY)

Prue Warrilow is the current CEO of ARACY - the Australian Research Alliance for Children and Youth. With a profound dedication to child and youth policy and service delivery, Prue has an extensive background in leadership roles, including serving as the interim CEO of Youth NSW (YNSW).

Prue is the founder and CEO of Families At Work, a company specialising in supporting families in accessing work. Her career spans over 30 years, during which she has provided strategic solutions and consultations to corporate, government, and not-for-profit sectors across Australia, New Zealand, and Singapore. Her expertise lies in work/life wellbeing strategies, which has equipped her with unique insights into best practices in human resources, diversity, people, and governance.

Prue has played significant roles in influencing public policy related to child and family wellbeing. She has served as the Chair of Families Australia for nine years and the Y NSW for three years. Additionally, she is an active member of several state and federal government advisory councils and non-government organisations, where she continues to advocate for policies that support the welfare of children and families.

Her extensive engagement in boards and advisory councils has allowed her to leverage her expertise, understanding, and valued networks to influence public policy thinking on child and family matters. Prue's paid and voluntary work is driven by her strong personal commitment to ensuring that children and young people can grow to be the best they possibly can be.

Prue Warrilow is an industry expert in children's services and child and family services, with a comprehensive understanding of the challenges and opportunities in these sectors. Her strategic approach and passion for enhancing the lives of children and families make her a pivotal leader in her field.
