Digging the ground is risky business!

Sectors at odds

Construction

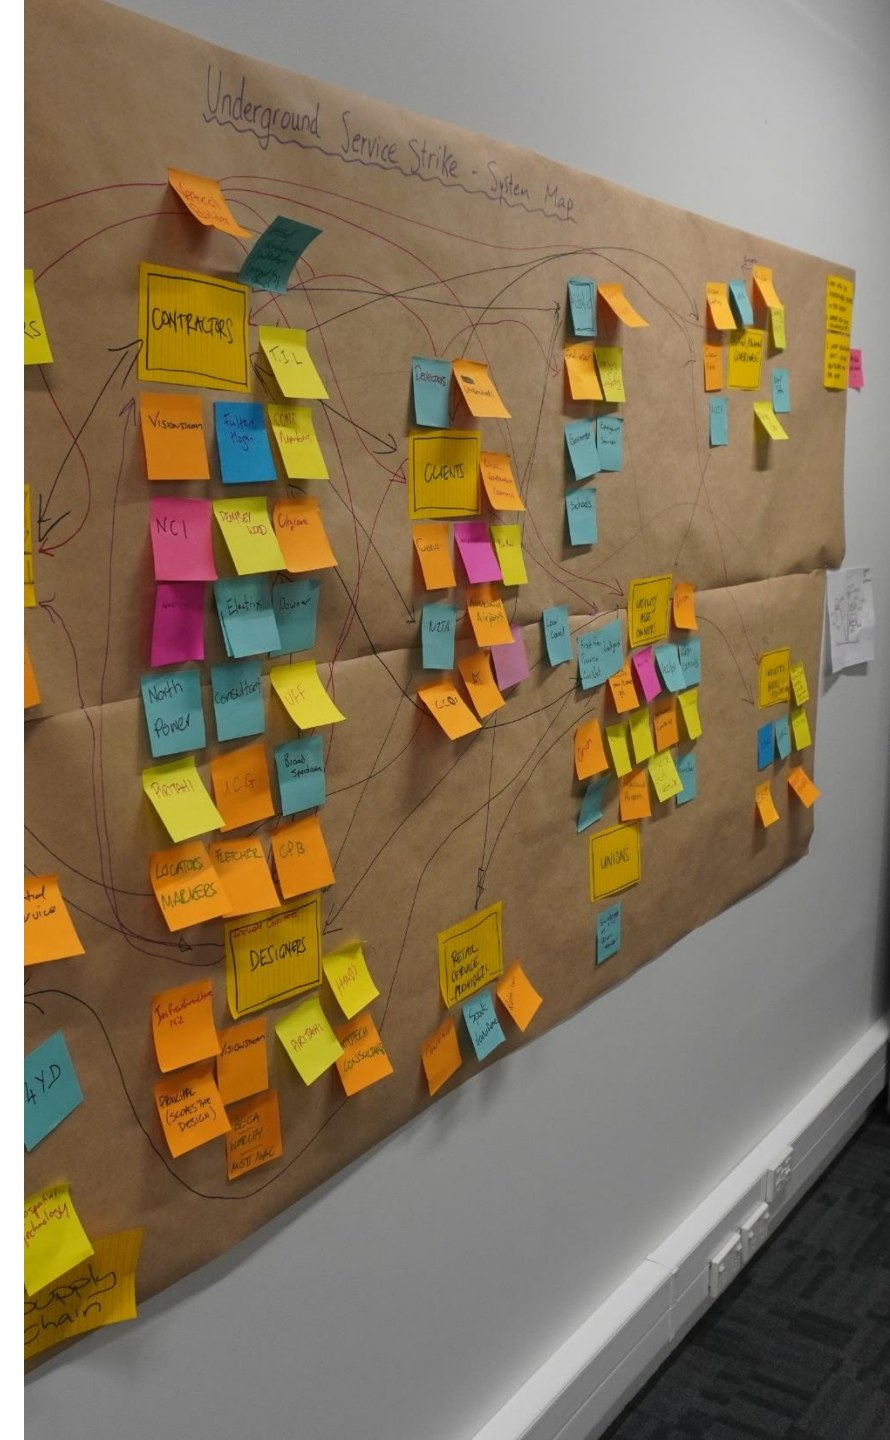

Services/Utilities

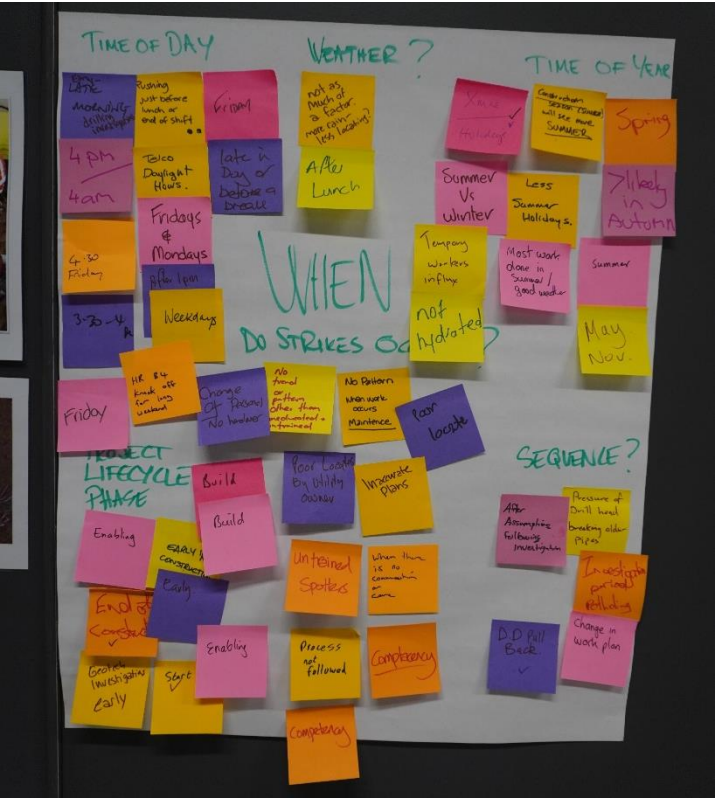

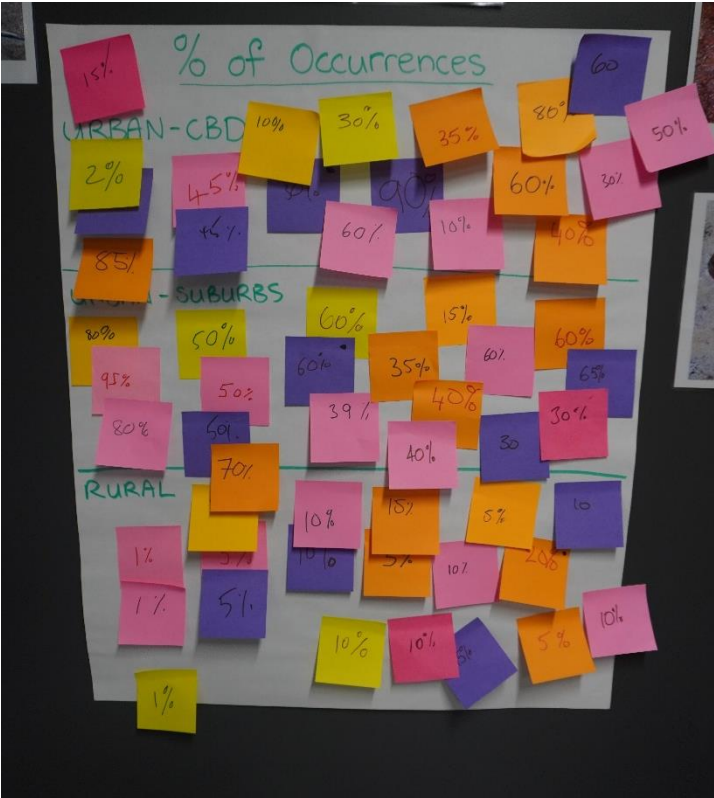

How can the two sectors work together to reduce the risk of harm?

Workshopping for success

Problems, problems everywhere

How to solve the millions of problems?

The two sectors can:

1. explore possible solutions
2. prioritise them
3. deliver solutions

And do so with Covid outbreaks

#BetterWorkNZ

The construction and utilities sectors are mahi ngatahi (working together) with the support of Worksafe, Waka Kotahi, and the Construction Health and Safety NZ (CHASNZ) to understand why hits occur and what needs to change so that workers can undertake their tasks without causing harm to themselves or damaging utilities and underground infrastructure.

As part of this Whakaiti Kino, we're challenging everyone to think outside the box to find solutions that can be developed and apply in real life. You don't have to have in-depth knowledge of the sectors to participate, but if you want to understand the issues identified, check out the outputs from our first workshop - it may help you understand the 'pain points' in the system.
