

Road safety strategy 2020-30 and Vision Zero

Tuesday 13 November, 9:30am – 10:15am

The trauma occurring on our roads is neither inevitable, or acceptable – it is clear a new approach is needed. Brent will provide an overview of the work the Ministry of Transport is leading to develop a new road safety strategy for New Zealand, including its consideration of Vision Zero.

Brent Johnston, Ministry of Transport

Brent is Manager of the Mobility and Safety team at the Ministry of Transport, where has worked since October 2008.

The Ministry is the Government's lead policy adviser on transport. In his role, Brent is responsible for advice on land transport safety, public and active transport, and accessibility. This includes leading the development of a new road safety strategy for New Zealand.

Prior to his current role, Brent managed the Ministry's Strategic Direction and Performance team, and in 2014 completed a secondment to the Policy Advisory Group in the Department of Prime Minister and Cabinet.

Brent holds a conjoint Bachelor of the Arts/Bachelor of Business Studies (Economics & Marketing) degree from Massey University, Palmerston North.
