

Tough conversations

We have been talking about road safety in New Zealand for quite a number of years now, but people are still being killed on our roads at a much higher rate than in most other developed nations. That leads to Police officers having tough conversations with families of crash victims almost daily. We need to have some tough conversations of another kind to turn that around.

Peter McKennie, NZ Police

Inspector Peter McKennie is the Manager: Operations for the National Road Policing Centre. He has almost 37 years of experience in a wide range of roles within New Zealand Police. In his current role, Peter's principle responsibility is enabling efficient and effective Police road safety operations nationally. He also represents Police on a variety of interagency governance and working groups, and is on the Trafinz Executive.
