Event Overview

The Australian Conference on Traumatic Stress (ACOTS) is a longstanding collaboration between the Australasian Society for Traumatic Stress Studies (ASTSS) and Phoenix Australia – Centre for Posttraumatic Mental Health.

Since 1993 ACOTS has provided a world class forum for the sharing of knowledge about traumatic stress within the Australasian region. The program aims to be topical and diverse, emphasising advances in research, clinical practice and implementation with vulnerable groups including military personnel, veterans, First Nations, communities impacted by disaster, first responders, people at risk of family and sexual violence, children and adolescents, as well as asylum seekers and refugees. It includes keynote presentations from internationally renowned experts in both research and clinical practice; in-depth workshops; symposia; panel discussions; and a student program.

2024 conference theme

Moving through trauma: pathways to transformation

This year's theme recognises the dynamic nature of recovery, emphasizing the integration of mind and body approaches, and exploring the evolving understanding of trauma's impact on individuals and communities.

Delegates

ACOTS has been advancing traumatic stress for more than 30 years, and attracts a broad range of delegates who are interested in posttraumatic mental health research, and its application to clinical practice, policy and systems change. The value of ACOTS as a meeting place and professional home is demonstrated in the number of delegates who return year after year to re-connect with colleagues and grow their professional network.
