

A hotbed of stranded assets - or a goldmine for transformation? Planning for the next gen of NZ agriculture as the world of fake meat and plant milk rapidly heats up

Rosie will be speaking about the rapid advancements in alternative proteins taking place globally and what this means for New Zealand, from an industry perspective, but also for our planners. Are we prepared for the rapid food transformation in the making? And as cattle are looking more and more like stranded assets, how can we best plan and prepare NZ and its infrastructure for this step change shift in the global food production system?