STORIES & STRATEGIES

Every workplace in Ontario has a story—moments of challenge, resilience, and lessons learned. This conference brings those stories to the forefront, showing how real experiences shape practical strategies that protect both people and businesses. By sharing narratives of overcoming obstacles and translating them into actionable health and safety practices, participants will see how lived experience becomes the blueprint for stronger planning, safer operations, and sustainable success.

KEYNOTES | April 21, 2026

MORNING KEYNOTE 8:15 – 9:15 am

The Future of Performance: Why Mental Agility is Your Greatest Asset

DR. LISA BÉLANGER

Behavioural Change Expert and Researcher

In today's fast-paced, high-pressure work environment, success isn't just about intelligence or hard work — it's about mental agility. The ability to adapt, stay focused, and manage stress effectively is the secret weapon of top performers and thriving organizations. But here's the truth: mental agility is directly tied to mental health, and when we fail to prioritize it, productivity, innovation, and employee well-being suffer.

She'll explore the hidden costs of burnout, stress, and cognitive overload — and provide actionable strategies to build a workplace culture that supports sustainable success. Participants will leave equipped with practical tools to work better, lead smarter, and build meaningful, sustainable success — while prioritizing well-being every step of the way.

AFTERNOON KEYNOTE 2:30 – 3:30 pm

The Power of Perception: Own Your Story

YAN MARKSON

Communication, Human Behaviour and Perception Strategist

When you're operating in a flow state, it isn't luck or coincidence. It's a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Yan Markson offers a fresh, engaging take on how a growth mindset and self-reinvention can help you spot opportunities, innovate, and thrive in a fast-paced world. Discover how changing your state of mind fundamentally changes your "zone of possibilities."

Backed by behavioural psychology and cognitive science, this interactive keynote shows the real, measurable impact of perception and state of mind on success. Markson leverages live and interactive mentalism and storytelling to illustrate the power of perception and inspires the audience to set intentions, create smart goals, reframe challenges, and take ownership over their story.

TAPREPORT

In today's fast-changing economic landscape, workplace health and safety is more than compliance—it's a shared responsibility that demands clarity, strong leadership, and continuous innovation. This dynamic panel discussion will bring these elements together by clarifying the distinct legal obligations of employers, supervisors, contractors, and owners under current legislation while exploring practical strategies to reduce liability and strengthen organizational accountability. It will also examine how building a strong talent pipeline, embedding safety culture into leadership development, and leveraging mentorship can prepare the next generation of safety leaders. Finally, the session will highlight how emerging technologies—from wearable devices and real-time monitoring to AI-driven risk assessments and digital collaboration platforms—are transforming safety practices and enabling organizations to meet growing project demands with greater efficiency, confidence, and care.

OHS Law Update: Trends, Triggers, and What Employers Must Do Now

Ontario's occupational health and safety landscape is shifting fast—and employers can't afford to fall behind. This session delivers a clear, practical look at emerging legal trends, new regulatory expectations, and the hot button issues driving enforcement in 2026. We'll break down what Ontario business owners must know now: evolving due diligence standards, rising psychosocial hazard obligations, the impact of new technologies, and the latest inspection priorities. Participants will leave with actionable insights, compliance ready strategies, and a sharper understanding of how to protect their people—and their organization—amid a rapidly changing OHS legal environment.

Psychological Safety as Prevention: How Safer Leadership Reduces Workplace Violence and Harassment

Krista Krziysek, Vice President of Human Resources, Keg Restaurants Ltd.

Adam Palmer, Safety Manager, Faculty of Health Sciences, McMaster University

Kristy Cork, Specialized Consultant, Workplace Safety & Prevention Services (Moderator)

Workplace violence and harassment don't occur in a vacuum, they thrive in environments where fear, uncertainty, and power imbalances go unaddressed. This session explores how psychologically safe leadership serves as a foundational prevention strategy. Participants will examine how leaders' behaviors, communication practices, and responses to conflict directly affect the frequency and severity of workplace violence and harassment incidents.

This session will illustrate how leaders can create climates of trust, respect, and transparency that deter harmful behaviors before they escalate. Attendees will learn how to recognize early warning signs, encourage reporting without retaliation, set behavioral norms, and intervene effectively. By integrating psychologically safe leadership practices, organizations can reduce incidents, strengthen employee wellbeing, and build a culture where people feel safe to speak up.

Building a Feedback Culture to Strengthen Safety, Trust, and Performance

Sandra Montanino, Founder and Principal, Navig8 Professional Development Inc.

In the workplace, feedback isn't just a performance management tool; it's a safety imperative. Yet many organizations struggle with a culture where employees hesitate to give or receive feedback, fearing conflict, defensiveness, inaction, or negative repercussions. When feedback is avoided, poorly delivered or received, safety risks increase, accountability weakens, and valuable opportunities for learning and improvement are lost. This session explores how health and safety workers and leaders can build a culture where feedback is not only accepted but expected. A feedback-rich environment fosters trust, engagement, and continuous improvement – key pillars of a high-performing and safe workplace. Participants will gain practical strategies to seek, give, and receive feedback more effectively and consistently, helping to shift feedback from a difficult conversation into a powerful tool for growth, learning, and safety.

Making Safer Possible: Changing the Unchangeable in MSD Prevention

Christian Bell, Southwestern & Northern Ontario Health, Safety and Environment (HSE) Manager, EllisDon

Greg Moryc, Health, Safety, and Environment (HSE) Supervisor, Enova Power

Don Patten, Specialized Consultant (Ergonomics), Workplace Safety & Prevention Services

Sophie Rioux, Director Health & Safety, Bath & Body Works Canada

Peter Vi, Ergonomist, Infrastructure Health & Safety Association

Sponsored by

In many workplaces (especially warehouses, manufacturing lines, and other high demand environments), changing how the work is done may seem like the only way to prevent MSDs, yet it isn't always realistic or practical. Processes are fixed, space is limited, and operations shift constantly, making MSD prevention a persistent challenge. This panel brings together experts who navigate these constraints every day. They'll explore what organizations can do when engineering changes aren't possible, sharing practical risk reduction approaches, real world examples, and small adjustments that make a meaningful impact.
