Diana E. Páez is Senior Director of Energy & Mobility at the William Davidson Institute at the University of Michigan (WDI), a non-profit organization focused on advancing economic and social development in low- and middle-income countries. She leads WDI's work supporting energy and mobility businesses, innovators, and policymakers as they adapt to the global energy transition. Her recent work centers on the transition to electric mobility in emerging markets, advising public and private leaders on opportunities across the electric vehicle value chain, as well as workforce, infrastructure, and policy implications. Diana also identifies and supports innovative e-mobility startups. She brings over 15 years of global development experience across government, private sector, academia, and civil society. Diana holds degrees in law, public international law, and international studies, and has completed executive programs in energy leadership and mobility.
