

Matt Farley

Asian Development Bank

Matt Farley is the Director of the Infrastructure and Technology Department at the Asian Development Bank (ADB). In this capacity, he is responsible for leading the integration of modern technologies, including initiatives such as the implementation of Microsoft's Copilot to enhance productivity and collaboration across the bank. His focus is on driving ADB's digital transformation efforts and ensuring operational efficiency through innovative IT solutions.

Matt Farley relocated to the Philippines in 2018 to join ADB after working with Chevron for 11 years, where he had gained extensive experience in IT Innovation and leadership.
