

TIM WILFORD

Director, Community Consultations, ANU,
NSC

Tim is Director of Community Consultations at the ANU National Security College, where he leads Australia's first comprehensive research program examining how Australians perceive national security, risk and resilience. This landmark initiative is designed as a national resource for governments, parliaments and communities – informing public debate and strengthening Australia's preparedness and resilience.

He previously led the College's Policy Outreach and Engagement team, expanding its impact across Australia's national security community, by bridging academic expertise and practitioner experience to advance national security literacy. He also oversaw the College's marketing, communications and production services.

With more than 15 years' experience in strategic communications, stakeholder engagement and digital media, Tim blends a unique set of skills to achieve policy impact and build communities of practice. Before joining the College, he worked at Four Corners, the ABC's flagship investigative journalism program, giving him first-hand experience in shaping public understanding of complex national issues.
