It's Never Too Late to Think about Retirement is a lunchbox session designed as an open, reflective conversation about one of the most significant transitions in an academic career.

Chaired by CAUTHE Fellow Professor Perry Hobson, the session brings together senior academics who are either retired or approaching retirement to share their personal stories, lessons learned, and practical insights. Through candid discussion, the seminar will explore the emotional, professional, and practical dimensions of preparing for retirement, demystifying what can often feel like an uncertain or overlooked stage of academic life. Whether retirement feels imminent or distant, this session offers thoughtful perspectives and gentle guidance for navigating the retirement journey with intention and confidence.

UniSuper's Financial Adviser, Tristan Barnes, will also join the conversation to help attendees consider the non-financial side of retirement planning, including personal goals, lifestyle aspirations, and practical steps to shape their best retirement.

This seminar is particularly relevant for senior academics beginning to think about retirement, those nearing this transition, and anyone interested in understanding how colleagues have navigated this important phase of their academic journey.

Please collect your lunch from the Concourse and take it with you to The Vines Room
