ABOUT APAMT

The Asia Pacific Association of Medical Toxicology (APAMT) is a distinguished international organization dedicated to advancing chemical safety, poison control, and treatment throughout the Asia Pacific region. Established in 1989 by a pioneering group of medical toxicologists, APAMT has since grown into a leading platform for collaboration among healthcare professionals, researchers, government agencies, and poison control centers. The association plays a vital role in addressing poisoning-related challenges by fostering cooperation between national and international institutions, including the World Health Organization (WHO), and by supporting ongoing education, research, and policy development in the field of toxicology.

At the core of APAMT's mission is the commitment to enhancing clinical toxicology expertise, improving poison management strategies, and reducing the impact of toxic exposures. The organization actively promotes scientific research on poisoning and toxic substances, enabling the exchange of critical data and best practices among poison centers across the region. Through annual conferences, training programs, and collaborative initiatives, APAMT provides a unique forum for professionals to discuss emerging threats, share innovative treatment approaches, and explore advancements in toxicology. By bridging gaps between academia, healthcare systems, and policymakers, APAMT continues to make significant contributions toward safer communities and better patient outcomes across the Asia Pacific.
