UK Interdisciplinary Breast Cancer
Symposium

Welcome

We established the UK Interdisciplinary Breast Cancer Symposium in 2018 to bring together everyone with an interest in breast cancer research and treatment. There are huge advances being made that affect researchers, health professionals, the pharmaceutical and other medical industries and patients. We want those advances to continue by getting everyone involved to spend time with each other and learn from each other.

We have held the UKIBCS every two years since then. We had over 900 delegates at our last meeting, which included an active group of those affected by breast cancer.

Treating breast cancer, understanding why breast cancer develops, and preventing it in the first place all depend on the interaction of professionals from many disciplines. That is why this year we have joined forces with more members than ever, so that as many disciplines as possible can be involved in the meeting. All the organisations on page 4 are committed to making the UKIBCS the biggest, most prominent and most wide-ranging breast cancer meeting in the UK.

We hope that you will join us to make this 5th UKIBCS a huge success.

Patient Advocates

We will have patient advocates at the Symposium (potentially up to 5% of all the delegates). The Executive Committee is committed to having our patient advocates play a full and active part in the Symposium, while ensuring that all commercial sponsors can still abide by the ABPI Code of Practice.

Patient advocates will have access to all parts of the programme and all areas of the Symposium, with the following exceptions:

- They will not have access to the main commercial exhibition space in Hall 3. There will be catering facilities in a separate area for patients.
- They will not have access to any of the industry Symposia.

Patient advocates will be present in all other areas, and they may wish to talk with exhibitors in those unrestricted areas. We ask you and your representatives to be mindful of this.
