PROFESSOR GEERT D'HAENS

Geert D'Haens is Professor of gastroenterology at the Academic Medical Center at the University of Amsterdam where he leads the IBD Unit. After graduation at the University of Leuven, Belgium, he was trained in gastroenterology, gastrointestinal endoscopy and inflammatory bowel diseases at the University Hospitals in Leuven and at the University of Chicago Hospitals under the mentorship of Paul Rutgeerts and Steven Hanauer, respectively. He finished his PhD thesis in 1996 on mechanisms causing postoperative recurrence of Crohn's disease. After that, most of his research efforts went into the mechanism of action of new IBD drugs, the development of endoscopic endpoints and surrogate markers for IBD and the effect of early intervention with anti-TNF. In 1999, he was co-founder of ECCO, the European Crohn's and Colitis Organization. Currently, D'Haens leads a group of more than 35 IBD researchers in the AMC. He is also Medical Director of Robarts Clinical Trials in Europe and former chairman of IOIBD, the international organization for study of IBD. He authored more than 400 peer reviewed articles so far and participates in many drug development programs and clinical trials for IBD.
