

With a background education in Biology by Eduardo Mondlane university in 1995, and a PhD degree by University of Copenhagen Sonia Enosse is working at the National Institute of health in Mozambique (INS) since 1999 as a researcher with the main science focus in the field of epidemiology, molecular biology of malaria parasites and clinical trials. From 2011-2017 she was the president of the INS Institutional Review board where she had the opportunity to work in revising proposals and training INS and other health professionals in research ethics and had interest also in aspects of research integrity. From 2014 – 2019 she worked as the head of the Department of Training, Information and Communication at INS. Since 2019 she works as the National director of research in health and well-being at INS. She also has experience as a lecture of research methodology, quantitative research methods in different universities in the country.