

Special Session Proposal

Tourism, a source of wealth and employment creation. The long-term sustainability of an extrategic sector for the global economy

Javier Sánchez-Rivas García / Jesús de Sancha Navarro
Dpto. Análisis Económico y Economía Política, Universidad de Sevilla / Dpto.
Economía Financiera y Análisis de Operaciones de la Universidad de Sevilla sanchezrivas@us.es / jesma19@hotmail.com

Tourism has become one of the most important economic sectors in world terms, both in the generation of employment and in the creation of wealth, not only in developed countries but also in developing countries such as Argentina or Perú.

The sustainability of the Tourism Sector in the long term represents a way to ensure the economic growth of the countries where this activity is developed, it is therefore very important to conserve the resources that allow the attraction and competitiveness of tourist destinations, in addition to seeking the application appropriate transversal public policies to implement the sector.

Topics included in this issue (but not limited to) may be:

- Relations of energy, production and sustainability in the tourism sector
- Relations water, production and sustainability in the tourism sector
- Public policies that allow sustainable growth of the tourism sector
- Environmental Kuznets Curve (EKC) in the tourism sector
- Use of energy, production and climatic variables in the tourism sector
- Legislation for the protection of cultural and environmental heritage and its relationship with the tourism sector.
- Novelty ideas related to sustainability in the economic sectors