Special Session Proposal

Regional and local impacts of renewal investments

Organisers: Roberto Ramos and Eduardo Gutiérrez (Banco de España)

Abstract

Attempts to reduce carbon emissions and promote economic growth through renewable investments will require the participation of regional administrations and local communities. Hence one important question to answer is why some residents might oppose renewable investments, even those promising socioeconomic benefits to their communities. The contributed session wants to shed some light on the costs and benefits that different forms of renewable investments might produce in regions and municipalities.
