CLUSTER'26

Cluster'26, the 12th International Conference on Clustering Aspects of Nuclear Structure and Dynamics, will take place in London in June 2026. This event brings together researchers from academia and industry to explore the latest developments in understanding and manipulating nuclear clustering phenomena.

Building on a distinguished conference series that began in Bochum, Germany, in 1969, Cluster'26 continues its tradition as the leading global forum dedicated to clustering in atomic nuclei. Hosted at the Institute of Physics in London, the conference invites participants from around the world to deepen our understanding of how nuclei form cluster structures.

The programme will feature invited talks by experts from world renowned scientific institutions, alongside a comprehensive selection of oral presentations, poster sessions, networking opportunities, and a commercial exhibition showcasing companies with interests aligned to nuclear clustering and related scientific fields. A range of sponsorship opportunities is also available to help organisations maximise their visibility throughout the event.

We warmly invite companies, organisations, and researchers across all areas of science to support and attend this unmissable conference.

We look forward to welcoming you to Cluster'26!
