

Associate Professor Shahed Nalla of the Department of Human Anatomy and Physiology, Faculty of Health Science, University of Johannesburg has close to 30 years of experience in the Teaching, Learning and Assessment of Human Anatomy to undergraduate students in Allied Medical programmes. He is a life member of the Anatomical Society of Southern Africa (ASSA) and of the Australian Society of Human Biology (ASHB) and member of the Anatomical Society. Research niche areas are in Applied Anatomy with a focus on the evolution of the Hominid thorax and in anatomical variation and its clinical application in modern and ancient human populations.